Reception and Lecture by Dartmouth College's Professor Michael Dorsey

Climate change: Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow

Climate change catastrophe looms large on the horizon. During this summer's special "Thematic Debate on Climate Change as a Global Challenge" at the UN General's Assembly, division and disunity continued to shape the multilateral conversation. The US remains committed to going it alone. The Chinese and Indians are still reluctant to join the Kyoto process. No one leader rose with a compelling voice or mandate to move the process--despite three special climate change envoys.

How did we get to this impasse? How will we surmount it? What key actors and institutions will shape the forthcoming discussions in Bali, this December?

Join Dartmouth College's Professor Michael Dorsey for an evening of candid, frank talk and discussion of this important issue.
